

Clinic on the street: Paths of production of life

Gilson Gabriel da Silva Firmino<sup>1</sup>, Silvio Yasui<sup>2</sup>.

ABSTRACT

The phenomenon of urbanization is a crucial factor in human life in its civilizing process. When we approach the dimension of life on the streets, we are taken by the diversity of sensations that provoke us to experience other experiences and ways of understanding this singular and simultaneously collective universe in our daily lives. As a starting point of this study, we apprehended the context of the streets in the cities as places of multiple connections, encounters and production of life experienced by the homeless population in their modes of existence, having as the background of our analysis the public policies of the SUS, Psychiatric Reform and Psychosocial Care through the clinical experiences lived by the health unit Consultório na Rua de Campinas SP. In this walk, we are guided by the key question: How do we capture the signals that come from the street on the trails of the agencies of life production in the landscapes of care? Our objectives aim to monitor the production of health care in the rueiro territories, using some sources of material researched such as field diaries, medical records, images, sounds and interviews, among others. In consonance, we fabricate the analysis of the effects of care in the field of health triggered by clinical and management practices to complex cases developed in the services of the mental health network of the municipality. The methodological strategy used is cartography as a research-intervention methodology unfolded from the nomadic case-guide in line with the epistemology of crossroads as a cartographic means of analysis of health care networks. To date, the results of this qualitative research point to a transmutation of the conception of health care triggered by the effects of caregiver encounters experienced in loco and in action, as well as providing the co-creation of other existential realities guided by the unconditional defense of the reinvention of life in its emancipatory and civic dimension.

Keywords: Street, Clinic on the street, Clinic, Care.

---

<sup>1</sup> Unesp Assis – SP

<sup>2</sup> Unesp Assis – SP